BSGR responds to press speculation

20 March 2015

As a matter of policy we do not comment on rumours from corrupted sources. Nonetheless, under a misleading and sensationalised headline, the WSJ has chosen to publish a story placed by anonymous sources that says nothing more than "no decisions have been made by US authorities". It is clear that this so-called "story" emanates from Guinea and third parties who have commercial interests in Guinea, not by the Department of Justice or any other regulatory body. It is a further attempt to smear BSG Resources by those who are trying to steal its assets.

We decry this careless journalism which falls short of the standards of the WSJ. As we have said repeatedly, BSGR has done nothing improper and we are confident that the US authorities will ultimately come to that conclusion based on the evidence. BSGR will enforce its rights and entitlements through international arbitration, and in accordance with our detailed witness statements, the Government of Guinea still needs to explain the lack of credible evidence used to justify the expropriation of BSGR's mining rights. BSGR reserves its rights in respect of the WSJ article and will take all necessary steps to protect itself.
BSGR responds to press speculation

enhance the functionality of the website, to enable the Group to monitor usage and to assist with future communications. By continuing to use the site users will be deemed to have accepted the policy and the use of cookies for these limited purposes only.

While every attempt has been made to ensure the accuracy of all statements at the time of writing, it must be born in mind that BSGR is constantly changing and developing in line with strategy and the markets in which it operates. We regularly check website content but cannot accept responsibility for actions or decisions based on information contained on this website. All questions regarding BSGR’s most current status should be checked. Contact details can be found below.