ANA PALACIO ELECTED SECRETARY-GENERAL OF ICSID

On September 20, 2006, the Administrative Council of ICSID unanimously elected Ms. Ana Palacio as the Centre’s new Secretary-General. Ms. Palacio, a Spanish national, was appointed Senior Vice President and World Bank Group General Counsel in June 2006.

Ms. Palacio was previously a member of the Spanish Parliament, where she chaired the Joint Committee of the two Houses for European Union Affairs. She held this post from 2004 until taking up her new World Bank duties in late August 2006. From 2002 to 2004, Ms. Palacio served as Foreign Minister of Spain under Prime Minister José María Aznar. As the first woman Foreign Minister in Spain, she held the title of the most senior post ever to have been filled by a woman in the Spanish Government. During her tenure as Foreign Minister, Ms. Palacio also represented Spain on the Praesidium of the European Convention where she was actively involved in the debate and in the drafting of legislative texts concerning reforms of the treaties governing the European Union.

MEMBERSHIP NEWS

On January 25, 2006, Syria deposited with the World Bank its instrument of ratification of the ICSID Convention. In accordance with its Article 68, the ICSID Convention entered into force for Syria on February 24, 2006. With this recent ratification, the number of ICSID Contracting States has reached 143. An up-to-date list of the ICSID Contracting States and Other Signatories of the Convention is available on the Centre’s website at http://www.worldbank.org/icsid.

AMENDMENTS TO THE ICSID RULES

The ICSID Administrative Council adopted amendments to the ICSID Regulations and Rules and to the ICSID Additional Facility Rules, which came into effect on April 10, 2006. As amended, the rules now provide for preliminary procedures concerning provisional measures, expedited procedures for dismissal of unmeritorious claims, access of non-disputing parties to proceedings, publication of awards, and additional disclosure requirements for arbitrators. The texts of the amended rules are posted on the ICSID website and available on request form the Centre in a booklet form.
DISPUTES BEFORE THE CENTRE

Eleven new proceedings were instituted before the Centre in the first half of 2006. With these proceedings, the total number of cases registered with ICSID by June 30, 2006 reached 210.

Ten of the new arbitration proceedings were brought under the ICSID Convention and one under the ICSID Additional Facility Rules. Seven of the new cases are based on ICSID arbitration provisions of investment treaties. In two of the cases, claimants are seeking to establish ICSID jurisdiction on the basis of a similar provision contained in investment contracts with the host State. In two further proceedings, the jurisdiction of the Centre is being asserted alternatively on the basis of treaty and law provisions referring to ICSID arbitration.

In total, there were 113 ICSID cases pending before the Centre during the period January – June 2006. One hundred and twelve of them were arbitration proceedings and one a conciliation case. The pending cases involved nine arbitration proceedings governed by the Additional Facility Rules and 95 original arbitration proceedings under the ICSID Convention. Eight additional proceedings involved applications of parties seeking post-award remedies.

During the period January – June 2006, seven original ICSID Convention proceedings were concluded, six of which were arbitration proceedings and one a conciliation proceeding. The conciliation proceeding was concluded with a report of the conciliation commission. Awards were rendered in two of the six concluded arbitration proceedings and four other cases were discontinued at the request of one or both parties involved. In addition, a decision on rectification of the award was issued in one of the cases. In another case, an ad hoc committee issued its decision on an application for the annulment of an award previously rendered.

In total, fourteen arbitral tribunals and one ad hoc committee were constituted in the cases pending during the period January – June 2006 and eighteen hearings and fifteen first sessions were held. ICSID tribunals issued in the period seven decisions on jurisdiction, a decision on a request for provisional measures, a decision on an application for bifurcation of jurisdiction from the merits, and a decision on issues of State responsibility and disclosure.

Procedural developments in the disputes before the Centre during the period January 1 – June 30, 2006 are provided below. The latest developments in the caseload may be followed on the Centre’s website at http://www.worldbank.org/icsid, which is regularly updated.

Before joining the Spanish Government as Foreign Minister, Ms. Palacio was a member of the European Parliament during the 4th (1994–1999) and 5th (1999–2002) sessions of legislatures. She chaired a number of Parliamentary Committees including the Legal Affairs and Internal Market Committee (1999–2001) and the Justice and Home Affairs Committee (2001–2002). She was also elected to chair the Conference of Committee Chairmen, the Parliament’s most senior body for the coordination of its legislative work, in two half legislatures (1999 and 2001). Ms. Palacio’s work at the European Parliament focused on legislation concerning the internal market and on security and human rights issues.

A lawyer by profession, Ms. Palacio has held a number of senior positions in the governing bodies of the Madrid Bar, as well as the European Bar. She is an honorary member of the Bar of England and Wales. She is also a member of the Board of Trustees and former Executive President of the Academy of European Law; and Distinguished Professor of the European College in Parma. Ms. Palacio holds a Law Degree from the Universidad Nacional de Educación a Distancia and a BA in Political Science and Sociology (with Award for Academic Achievement) from the Universidad Complutense in Spain. She graduated from the Lycée Français (Baccalauréat in Mathematics).

Ms. Palacio’s outside activities have included serving on the Board of Trustees of the Carnegie Corporation of New York and on the Advisory Boards of a number of institutions and foundations. Ms. Palacio is also a member of the Global Advisory Council of The American Interest and of Revue de Droit de l’Union européenne, in which she regularly publishes articles. She has published extensively in a number of international political journals, including Foreign Affairs and Géopolitique, and has been listed by the Wall Street Journal among the 75 global opinion leaders. In October 2001, the same newspaper published a feature article on her in its supplement on 12 influential players on the world business stage.

The Fall 2005 issue of the ICSID Review—Foreign Investment Law Journal was published recently. The issue features articles by Gabrielle Kaufmann-Kohler on global implications of the U.S. Federal Arbitration Act and by Anthony C. Sinclair on the substance of nationality requirements in investment treaty arbitration. The issue also reproduces the texts of the award rendered in Consortium R.F.C.C. v. Kingdom of Morocco (ICSID Case No. ARB/00/6) and the Decision on Respondent’s Objections to Jurisdiction issued in Aguas del Tunari S.A. v. Republic of Bolivia (ICSID Case No. ARB/02/3), which is accompanied by a declaration by one of the arbitrators. The issue also contains the texts of three decisions on the stay of enforcement of an ICSID award, issued in Patrick Mitchell v. Democratic Republic of the Congo, (ICSID Case No. ARB/99/7), in MTD Equity Sdn. Bhd. and MTD Chile S.A. v. Republic of Chile (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/7) and in Repsol YPF Ecuador S.A. v. Empresa Estatal Petroleos del Ecuador (PETROECUADOR) (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/10). The issue further contains a book review by Christoph H. Schreuer, reviewing R. Doak Bishop, James Crawford and W. Michael Reisman’s book entitled “Foreign Investment Disputes: Cases, Materials and Commentary.” Further, Stanimir A. Alexandrov reviews a recent UNCTAD publication, “International Investment Agreements: Key Issues” (Volume I), edited by Karl P. Sauvant and Jörg Weber.

During the period January – June 2006, the Centre also published two new releases for its Investment Treaties collection. These releases contain the texts of forty bilateral investment treaties from forty-five countries. The collection now comprises 1,080 treaties concluded between 1959 and 2005 by some 165 countries from all major regions of the world.

The Centre also published in the period a new set of booklets, reproducing the English, French and Spanish texts of the amended ICSID Regulations and Rules and ICSID Additional Facility Rules, which took effect on April 10, 2006.
THE CONSULTATION PERIOD REQUIREMENT IN INVESTMENT TREATIES AS A MATTER OF JURISDICTION, ADMISSIBILITY OR PROCEDURE

By Martina Polasek, Counsel, ICSID

Many investment treaties contain dispute settlement clauses that provide for consultations and negotiations between an investor and a State before a dispute may be submitted to international arbitration. The requirement to attempt an amicable settlement often specifies a certain period of time, usually triggered by events giving rise to the dispute or by the covered investor’s notification of the dispute to the State. These consultation and negotiation periods, also known as “waiting” or “cooling off” periods, typically vary from three to twelve months. Their purpose has been described as to allow for good faith consultations and negotiations that might lead to an amicable settlement before the institution of formal proceedings. While the objective seemingly has not raised any debate, the nature and consequences of this pre-arbitration requirement have been discussed in a number of cases brought under investment treaties, usually in the framework of the relevant tribunal’s jurisdictional determinations. State parties have in several instances objected that the investor did not comply with the consultation provision, in most cases arguing that a jurisdictional requirement or a precondition to jurisdiction was not met, that the claim was premature or inadmissible, or that a procedural prerequisite was not satisfied.

Many ICSID tribunals have held that the consultation period requirement was observed without entering into a discussion on the nature of the condition. Nevertheless, where the tribunals found that, under the interpretation of the clause, the factual compliance with the requirement was an issue, the classification of the requirement itself as one relevant to jurisdiction, admissibility or procedure became important in determining the consequences of a potential noncompliance. A lack of jurisdiction or admissibility would mean that the claim could not be heard by the tribunal, or at least not yet. If the requirement were procedural, however, this would seem to give the tribunal more discretion to hear the claim.

So far, no ICSID tribunal has dismissed a case for failure to comply with a consultation period, although one tribunal rejected a part of a claim (see below, Award of February 10, 1999 in Antoine Goetz and others v. Republic of Burundi (ICSID Case No. ARB/95/3) (Goetz), available on ICSID’s website). However, a recent order in the now discontinued case Western NIS Enterprise Fund v. Ukraine (ICSID Case No. ARB/4/2) (WNISEF) has indicated that such failure might warrant a dismissal of the entire claim (see Order of March 16, 2006, available on ICSID’s website). The case was brought to ICSID under the Ukraine-United States bilateral investment treaty (BIT) of 1994, which provided that the parties to the dispute should initially seek a resolution through consultation and negotiation and that, if the dispute could not be settled amicably and if six months had elapsed from the date on which the dispute arose, the investor could submit the dispute to ICSID (BIT Article VI(2) and (3)). One of the respondent’s objections during the jurisdictional phase of the proceeding was that the six-month period, which the respondent argued was a precondition for jurisdiction, had not been observed. The respondent submitted that the dispute could not have arisen on the date indicated by the claimant and in any event had not been properly notified to the respondent. The claimant argued that the determining dates for purposes of the six-month period were the date on which the dispute arose and the date of consent, and that a notice in writing was not necessary or should at least be judged liberally. The claimant had produced certain documentation in support of its allegations that it had, in fact, attempted to consult with Ukraine regarding the dispute; however, there was no evidence of a written notice from the claimant to the respondent invoking claims under the BIT.

The tribunal decided to rule on the question of the six-month period before ruling on its jurisdiction, which, it stated, was unaffected by the Order. Having declared that “proper notice is an important element of the State’s consent to arbitration, as it allows the State, acting through its competent organs, to examine and possibly resolve the dispute by negotiations” (see para. 5 of the Order), the tribunal found that the claimant had not given proper notice of the claim under the BIT. This defect, the tribunal concluded, could be remedied by a suspension of the proceeding during which the claimant could give proper notice to the respondent.
If proper notice were given within a certain period of time, the proceeding would be reactivated after six months or according to the parties’ agreement; if not, the case would be dismissed.

The WNISEF Order is interesting as to how the tribunal determined the nature of the consultation period requirement and the consequence arising from its noncompliance. The tribunal did not expressly discuss whether the requirement was a matter of jurisdiction, admissibility or procedure, but gave certain indications in this respect and, compared with previous jurisprudence, took a novel approach on the issue. This article explores how the consultation period requirement in investment treaties has been classified by arbitral tribunals so far, with particular focus on the solution offered by the WNISEF Order.

JURISDICTION AND ADMISSIBILITY

What is clear from the WNISEF Order is that it did not consider the consultation period requirement as a condition for the tribunal’s jurisdiction, since it held that jurisdiction was not affected. This is consistent with the approach of most other ICSID tribunals which have pronounced themselves on this question, with certain exceptions (see, e.g., para. 88 of the Decision on Jurisdiction of January 14, 2004 in Enron Corporation and Ponderosa Assets, L.P. v. Argentine Republic (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/3) (Enron), available at www.asil.org/ilib/Enron.pdf). In Goetz, the tribunal found that a part of the claim which had neither been properly notified to the respondent nor been subject to negotiations at diplomatic level as required by the relevant treaty was “irreceivable” (supra, para. 93 of the Award). The tribunal did not elaborate further on this concept. Similarly, the WNISEF Order indicated that the requirement was mandatory and that noncompliance would lead to a dismissal of the claim, with the distinction that the claimant was given the opportunity to remedy the deficient notice.

The solution in WNISEF resembles the decision on jurisdiction in SGS Société Générale de Surveillance S.A. v. Republic of the Philippines (ICSID Case No. ARB/02/6), Decision of January 29, 2004, available on ICSID’s website (SGS v. Philippines), which upheld the tribunal’s jurisdiction but found that the claim was inadmissible and, therefore, concluded that the proceeding was suspended until the claim was ripe. The inadmissibility related to a different issue than a consultation period, namely whether a dispute settlement clause in a bilateral investment treaty may automatically override a valid contractual choice of forum by the parties to determine essentially contractual claims. The SGS v. Philippines tribunal stated that there was an impediment to hearing the claim, as a party cannot rely on a contract as the basis of its claim without itself complying with the dispute settlement clause of that contract. The tribunal stated that such impediment was a matter of admissibility. It declared that “normally a claim which is within jurisdiction but inadmissible (e.g., on grounds of failure to exhaust local remedies) will be dismissed, although this will usually be without prejudice to the right of the claimant to start new proceedings if the obstacle to admissibility has been removed (e.g., through exhaustion of local remedies)” (see para. 171 of the Decision on Jurisdiction). However, the tribunal found that there was a certain degree of flexibility in the way admissibility is applied, at least regarding questions of competing fora. Under the general power to make orders required for the conduct of proceedings (ICSID Arbitration Rule 19), the tribunal stayed the case until the condition for admissibility was satisfied. Although the suspension in WNISEF was limited in time and the claim would have been dismissed if certain conditions were not satisfied, the similarity of the solution in SGS v. Philippines would seem to suggest that, as in SGS v. Philippines, the WNISEF tribunal also classified the issue in that case as one of admissibility.

The distinction between jurisdiction and admissibility in the context of the ICSID Convention has been debated by several tribunals and by doctrine. Some tribunals have held that the distinction is not necessary or appropriate, observing that the Convention “deals only with jurisdiction and competence” (see, e.g., para. 33 of the Decision on Jurisdiction of January 14, 2004 in Enron (supra) and para. 41 of the Decision on Jurisdiction of July 17, 2003 in CMS Gas Transmission Company v. Argentine Republic (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/8), available on ICSID’s website). The tribunal in LESI, S.p.A. and Astaldi, S.p.A v. People’s Democratic Republic of Algeria (ICSID Case No. ARB/5/3) stated in a recent decision on jurisdiction that inadmissibility may have an impact on the jurisdiction of a tribunal (see para. 58 of the Decision on Jurisdiction of July 12, 2006, available on ICSID’s website). In this connection, the tribunal added that objections to admissibility and jurisdiction must be treated separately because they concern different questions, but that the distinction has no practical consequence in ICSID circumstances, as the review mechanism under the ICSID Convention is the same for both types of questions.
In his article “Jurisdiction and Admissibility,” Jan Paulsson suggests that issues of admissibility should be finally heard by the arbitrators and should not be subject to review, even in the context of the ICSID Convention’s review mechanism (see Global Reflections on International Law, Commerce and Dispute Resolution, Liber Amicorum in Honour of Robert Briner, ICC Publishing, November 2005, p. 608). He therefore considers the distinction between jurisdiction and admissibility important and proposes how to distinguish whether an objection relates to the former or the latter. In this respect, the author indicates that objections concerning compliance with consultation periods are threshold issues that should be classified as matters of admissibility (see id. p. 616).

An ICSID annulment committee has yet to analyze the question whether a ruling in a case rejected for inadmissibility could become annulable under Article 52 of the ICSID Convention. Aside from this question, could the distinction between jurisdiction and admissibility have any other bearing? The decisions in VNISEF and SGS v. Philippines seem to suggest this, as they imply that the tribunals in those cases had the power to suspend the proceedings while the impediment to hearing the case was being rectified. A tribunal which would conclude that it has no jurisdiction would have no such power.

JURISDICTION AND PROCEDURE

While few cases have indicated that the requirement to consult and negotiate is a matter of jurisdiction or admissibility, several have qualified it as a matter of procedure. In Ethyl Corporation v. Government of Canada (Ethyl), an UNCITRAL case under the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the tribunal questioned whether the NAFTA parties intended, as a condition for the tribunal’s jurisdiction, that the “procedural requirement” allowing the investor to submit a claim to arbitration if six months had elapsed from “the events giving rise to a claim” (Article 1120 of the NAFTA) must be fulfilled prior to the submission of a notice instituting arbitration proceedings. The tribunal concluded that a denial of jurisdiction and dismissal of the claim would “disserve, rather than serve, the object and purpose of NAFTA” (see para. 85 of the Award on Jurisdiction of June 24, 1998, 38 ILM 708 (1999)). It found that, in the circumstances of that case, where it seemed clear that no consultation or negotiation was even possible, it could be argued that the six-month “cooling off” period, which was intended to permit time to resolve the matter amicably, would not serve any purpose (see para. 84).

Nevertheless, the tribunal found that the controversy could have been avoided if the claimant would have waited six months after the legislative measures complained of finally entered into force before commencing the arbitration, instead of “jumping the gun” at a time when the relevant bill was still being considered (see para. 87). The tribunal therefore awarded costs against the claimant with respect to that part of the argument.

In another UNCITRAL case, Ronald S. Lauder v. The Czech Republic, which was brought under the Czech Republic-United States BIT, the tribunal interpreted the consultation period provision and found that the claimant had not complied with the six-month “waiting” period. However, as in Ethyl, the tribunal stated that, considering the circumstances of the case, the satisfaction of the requirement would not serve any purpose, especially since the respondent had not shown that it would have agreed to negotiate with the claimant and, had it desired to negotiate, could have done so after receiving notice of the initiation of arbitration proceedings. In this regard, the tribunal concluded that the requirement was “not a jurisdictional provision, i.e. a limit set to the authority of the Arbitral Tribunal to decide on the merits of the dispute, but a procedural rule that must be satisfied by the Claimant” (see para. 187 of the Final Award of September 3, 2001, available at http://ita.law.uvic.ca/documents/LauderAward.pdf).

In SGS Société Générale de Surveillance S.A. v. Islamic Republic of Pakistan (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/13), an ICSID case under the Pakistan-Switzerland bilateral investment treaty, the tribunal supported the view that consultation periods were “directory and procedural” rather than “mandatory and jurisdictional” (see para. 184 of the Decision on Jurisdiction, available on ICSID’s website). Also in this case, the tribunal put weight on the fact that the respondent had not shown any inclination to enter into consultations in regard to the treaty dispute, and determined that it would be ineffective from the point of view of case management to suspend the arbitration and require the claimant to first consult with the respondent before re-filing the claim. In Vena Hotels Limited v. Arab Republic of Egypt (ICSID Case No. ARB/98/4), although the respondent withdrew the objection to noncompliance with the three-month period under the Egypt-United Kingdom bilateral investment treaty, the tribunal observed that an upholding of the “procedural” objection would have had little effect but to delay the proceedings, since the noncompliance could have been easily rectified (see Section VII of the Decision on Jurisdiction of June 29, 1999, 6 ICSID Rep. 74 (2004)).

The tribunal in Bayindir Insaat Turizm Ticaret Ve Sanayi A.S. v. Islamic Republic of Pakistan (ICSID Case No. ARB/03/29) reached a similar conclusion, stating that a resubmission of a new request would not benefit either party (see para. 100 of the Decision of Jurisdiction of November 14, 2005, available on ICSID’s website). The Pakistan-Turkey BIT in that case prescribed a six-month consultation period following a written notification containing “detailed information.” The tribunal held that it did not need to make a definitive ruling whether a constitutional petition filed by the claimant before the courts of Pakistan could amount to such a notification, because, in light of the object and purpose of the notice requirement, it did not have an absolute character but constituted a merely procedural rule. As the purpose of the notice was to allow negotiations between the parties and the respondent had in any event not reacted to a later proper notice (delivered by the claimant before the initiation of the ICSID proceeding but before the six-month period had elapsed), it would be an “overly formalistic approach” in the circumstances of the case to consider the start of the six-month period to be the date of the later notice (see para. 102 of the Decision). Similarly, the tribunal in Consortium Groupement L.E.S.I.-DIPENTA v. Algeria (ICSID Case No. ARB/03/8) held that the requirement did not have an absolute character and could be dispensed with in cases where it was evident that a consultation attempt would fail due to the definitiveness in the attitude of the other party (see para. 32 of the Award of January 10, 2005, available on ICSID’s website).

The line of cases holding that the requirement to consult and negotiate before initiating arbitration proceedings is of a procedural nature rather than a condition precedent for jurisdiction has been criticized in Generation Ukraine Inc. v. Ukraine (ICSID Case No. ARB/00/9) (Generation Ukraine), where the tribunal incidentally interpreted the same bilateral investment treaty as the tribunal in WNISEF. The Generation Ukraine tribunal observed that it “would be hesitant to interpret a clear provision of the BIT in such a way so as to render it superfluous, as would be the case if a ‘procedural’ characterization of the requirement effectively empowered the investor to ignore it at its discretion” (see para. 14.3 of the Award of September 16, 2003, 44 ILM 404 (2005)).

THE REASONS FOR A DISTINCTION

The exact distinction between an issue of jurisdiction, more specifically an issue of admissibility, and a procedural rule is rather unclear. However, there are reasons for making a distinction in view of the possible consequence: a dismissal of the claim. The decisions which held that the consultation period requirement related to procedure rather than jurisdiction indicated that it was a non-absolute requirement that could be evaluated on a case-by-case basis in view of the purpose of the exercise: to allow good faith negotiations between the parties which might lead to an amicable settlement. These decisions seem to indicate a concern for the utility of the fulfillment of the requirement in circumstances where it seemed that consultations would be futile and that the claim might in any event be re-submitted. The concern raised in Generation Ukraine was that such a classification, with the effect that the investor could disregard the consultation period at his discretion, would render the provision meaningless. Would it matter how long the consultation period was as long as an attempt to reach a settlement had been made and failed? Would it, on the other hand, make sense to dismiss a case and require the claimant to start a new despite the fact that attempts at consultation were unsuccessful or likely to fail? It appears that the decisions dealing with an objection concerning the compliance with the consultation period requirement under treaties strove to strike a balance between the efficacy and the purpose of the requirement.

It appears from prevailing jurisprudence addressing the nature of the requirement of consultation and negotiation periods that a tribunal has certain powers to impose consequences other than immediate dismissal of a claim in cases of noncompliance. Christoph Schreuer suggests that noncompliance could only be a bar to hearing a case in extreme circumstances, e.g., in cases of “procedural bad faith such as starting arbitration prematurely in order to put pressure on the opposing party in negotiations” (Christoph H. Schreuer, “Travelling the BIT Route, Of Waiting Periods, Umbrella Clauses and Forks in the Road,” The Journal of World Investment & Trade, Vol. 5, No. 2, April 2004, p. 239). He concludes that an appropriate consequence of premature proceedings in other cases, those where procedural bad faith was not a factor, could be the awarding of costs against the claimant, as in Ethyl.

The WNISEF Order offers another solution: the rectification of the deficient notice and the suspension of the proceeding until the consultation period lapses.
Pursuant to the ICSID Convention, the Centre maintains a Panel of Conciliators and a Panel of Arbitrators. Under Article 13 of the Convention, each Contracting State may designate up to four persons to each Panel who will serve for a renewable period of six years. Up to 10 persons may be designated to each Panel by the Chairman of the Administrative Council.

In the period January 1 to June 30, 2006, the governments of Colombia, Egypt, France, Malawi, Mongolia and Singapore made designations to the ICSID Panels. The names of the recently designated appointees are provided below. A complete list of all Panel members is posted on the ICSID website at http://www.worldbank.org/icsid.

Colombia
Panel of Conciliators
Designations effective February 17, 2006:

Designations effective February 13, 2006:
Joon Seng Goh, Joseph Grimberg, Michael Hwang and Lip Ping Thean
The Seventeenth Annual Workshop of the Institute for Transnational Arbitration (ITA) was held on June 15, 2006 in Dallas, Texas. The workshop was co-chaired by Jack J. Coe of Pepperdine University School of Law, Barton Legum of the Paris office of Debevoise & Plimpton LLP, and Margrete Steves, Acting Lead Counsel, ICSID. By means of a mock arbitration proceeding, the workshop addressed various issues arising in the context of an investment treaty arbitration under the ICSID rules. Distinguished arbitrators and practitioners experienced in the field of international arbitration acted as role players and commentators, highlighting the various stages and the possible challenges that might arise in an investor-State arbitration proceeding under the ICSID rules.

Three ICSID Counsel, Aurélie Antonietti, Gabriela Alvarez Avila and Ucheora Onwuamaegbu also participated as role players in the mock proceeding, thereby providing insight into the screening process preceding the registration of a request for arbitration at ICSID.

The eight scenes of the workshop have been recorded and edited for educational purposes. A set of two DVDs, containing mock scenes and expert commentary will be available from the ITA shortly.

On November 17, 2006, ICSID will be hosting the 23rd in the series of annual colloquia on International Arbitration, co-sponsored by the American Arbitration Association (AAA), the International Court of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) and ICSID. The panel discussions will focus on (i) recent developments at the three institutions; (ii) production of documents and other evidentiary issues; (iii) new challenges regarding confidentiality; and (iv) selected substantive issues arising from arbitration involving State parties. During the luncheon session, a panel will take questions and observations from colloquium participants, enabling an interactive discussion on current issues in international arbitration.

For the conference brochure and registration information please visit the ICSID website at http://www.worldbank.org/icsid. The program is also reprinted on page 20 of this issue.

On Saturday, November 18, 2006, the London Court of International Arbitration, in co-operation with ICSID, will hold a Symposium based on current issues of interest in the field of international arbitration. The topics will be proposed in advance by delegates and then be debated from the floor. The symposium will follow immediately the AAA/ICC/ICSID 23rd Joint Colloquium on International Arbitration, thereby allowing for a continuation of discussions arisen at the previous day’s Joint Colloquium. It will be held at the Fairmount Hotel in Washington, D.C. The conference program and registration form is available on the LCIA website at http://www.lcia.org.
